Course Description

This course offers an introduction to the sociological analysis of sex, gender, gender relations, and sexuality. We will critically examine how gender shapes our everyday lived experiences, our identities, our interactions with others, and our relationships to broad institutions such as education, work, and family. Different theoretical perspectives will be drawn upon in order to better understand gender roles and the different ways in which individuals and groups are positioned in society. These theories will provide the foundation in our learning and understanding of the ways in which masculinity and femininity have been constructed in society. Finally, we will explore how the effects of gender intersect with race, class and sexuality.

Course Objectives/Learning Outcomes

On successful completion of this course, you are expected to be able to:

- Understand that gender is a social construction rather than merely 'natural'.
- Understand the differences between sex and gender.
- Recognize how we 'do gender' in a variety of different ways through our interactions with other people and social institutions.
- Understand a variety of sociological approaches to the study of gender.
- Apply a gender analysis to a variety of social issues.

Course Format

This course will be delivered in an asynchronous format. By 8:00 am every Monday I will post the week's lectures onto D2L in the "Content" section. I will also provide a News Item Announcement every Monday morning at 8:00 am to highlight important information and expectations for the week. It is expected that students will log in every Monday to check these News Announcements and locate the week's material. We will be utilizing D2L's discussion boards as well. I will open a discussion board each Monday for you to discuss the week's content amongst each other. These discussions are not part of your grade; however, they can be a valuable asset to your understanding of the course material.

Since this is a condensed semester, it is expected that you will log in and check your email and D2L News Announcements multiple times throughout the week.
